First of all we suggest that you arm your self with a budget so that you have no uncertainness over the price range. You can directly ask the jeweler about your prices and he will show you only those rings that fall within your buying range. This is important to avoid any confusion that usually arises in a jeweler's shop because of many dazzling varieties of diamond rings. As a general rule, however, you should set aside two to three months's salary for the purchasing. You should prefer buying from those diamond engagement rings that have a little lower quality of diamond. Such diamonds have yellowish color and invisible flaws inside of them. These diamonds also are categorized as near colorless and are cheaper than the colorless gems. But some flaws and yellowish color still is good enough to generate great amount of brilliance and fire from the gem for the ring. You can easily carry the ring with pride.

Place of purchasing the jewelry also is a deciding factor in its prices. if you prefer a physical store of your town, then you will be paying the price that is mentioned on the tag. Bargaining will bring down the prices, but only marginally as the jeweler has to meet many expenses to maintain the shop.

Another option for you is to find out if some jewelers are selling diamond engagement rings at cheaper prices in your locality. They may be selling old stock of rings to make way for the new arrivals. With some luck, you can find really great diamond rings at lower prices from such sales.

To ensure that you buy the jewelry at cheaper prices as compared to the physical stores, prefer online jewelers. There are plenty of jewelers doing business through internet. These jewelers are competitive as they have to combat the tough competition from hundreds of other online jewelry sites. Their overhead expenses negligible and they are ever willing to prune the prices.

You should devote some time for comparing as many jewelry sites as you can. The extensive comparison of the diamond engagement rings will lead you to the lower prices. Each online jeweler has set the prices at lowest possible level for the same quality of the rings to beat the competition.

While you settle for a jeweler, do not rush to send the order. First go through the jeweler's terms and conditions and ensure that the site has at least 30 day return policy. Such time is needed for the jewelry arriving at your place and then you are inspecting it for returning any damaged piece or the ring you do not find as per your specification.
